Schools Evolving into the Information-Age Paradigm

The following table is a list of schools that an Indiana University research team identified as likely to be evolving into the Information-Age paradigm of education. It is a tentative list because the research team has only been able to do a preliminary analysis of public information about the schools. The team, led by Dabae Lee, is comprised of Yeol Huh, Chun-Yi Lin, and Charles Reigeluth. Eulho Jung, Mina Min, and Verily Tan have assisted the team.

The table shows the school name, the type of school system (individual school, school district, or national school model), what district or model it is a part of, and the presence or absence of five criteria for the Information-Age paradigm: attainment-based student progress, personalized learning, collaborative problem-based learning, criterion-referenced student assessment, and multi-age grouping with multi-year mentoring.

The number of such characteristics is added to provide an overall rating of the extent to which the school system can be considered in the Information-Age paradigm. However, this does not take into account the greater importance of some criteria over others. Schools are listed alphabetically within rating category, beginning with the ones that have the most Information-Age core ideas.

If you know of any schools that should be added to this list, please contact us (reigelut@indiana.edu) to help us improve a website with current information: www.reinventingschools.net.
